Japanese Pronunciation Guidelines:

Japanese is a fairly mono-tone language in that they do not accent specific syllables.

Each syllable is pronounced with the same emphasis.

For example, most of us Americans learned to pronounce Hiroshima as "he-ro-SHEE-mah".

Sound out the words one sy-la-ble at a time (like: he-rō-shih-mah) with even emphasis on each syllable.

You may use a rise in pitch, as in asking a question -vs- making a statement.

If there are two vowels together, just hold the first one twice as long. It is not necessary to pronounce each one as a separate syllable ( i.e., bareriina is bah-reh-ree..nah = ballerina, or iie is ee...ay = no)

Do not mesh syllables together as we do in America.

For example: the "ng" in Nihongo is not pronounced like song or wrong... it is Nee-hōn-gō

"g" is always a hard "g", never a "j" sound

The letter "T" is pronounced sharply, no matter where it is in a word, not flattened like a "d".

For example: if we see "motto" (more), we may think of the English word that is spelled the same and pronounce it with the syllables run together and the "t" flattened. (i.e. "Live for today, that's my motto".)

But you would be more accurate if you sound out each syllable separately, with a sharp "t" sound. [ mōt-tō ]

If you are thinking in English and you see the word "ashita" (tomorrow) you may be tempted to pronounce it like

"uh-SHEEDUH". Try it one syllable at a time with no accents: "ah-shih-tah"

Some Americans drive a "Toy-YŌDA" (Toyota). Try "tō-yō-tah".

The word "wakarimasen" (I don't understand) is wah-kah-ree-mah-sën.

- Don't be tempted to say "-mâssën", it is "-mah-sën".

Once we get the pronunciation.... We may need to learn to listen "fast"... because the Japanese people speak very quickly. Sometimes it seems as if some vowels or syllables disappear or get lost when they speak.

"Do itashimashite" (you're welcome, don't mention it) is: dō ih-tah-shih-mah-shih-teh .

When pronounced quickly, it almost sounds like: doy tosh mosh tay

"f" at the beginning of a word sounds more like an "h". Do not touch your teeth to your lower lip on "f".

The Japanese "r" is pronounced with a slight trill. It sounds more like an English "d" than an "r"

- English name Kelley = keri and sounds like "keddy", rather than "kerry"

"L" is not in the Japanese vocabulary. Replace with an "r" sound.

(i.e. London = "Rondon" , Williams = sounds like Wirriams - spelled "Uiriamuzu" ) long "ī" pronounced like Eng. long "e" - like the "i" in "machine" or "unique"

short "i" pronounced like Eng. "ink" long "ē" is pronounced like Eng. long "a" - like the "e" in "crepe" short "e" is pronounced like Eng. "red"

long "ā" is pronounced like Eng. "park"

short "a" is pronounced like Eng. "abba father"

long "ō" is pronounced like Eng. "bowl" short "o" is pronounced like Eng. "most"

long "ū" is "oo" like in "Luke" - (Do not round or 'pucker' your lips when pronouncing the "u".)

short "u" is "oo" like in "look" - (Keep lips relaxed)

If you see a word written in Romaji with long vowels marked (long means elongated), such as: Obāsan, then, pronounce it specifically with a "long a" and hold it for two counts, like: Obaa-san

Is this important? Yes, obasan = aunt or middle-aged woman, while obāsan = grandmother or elderly woman

"desu" is pronounced like "dess", the "u" is silent. It is a "be" verb, like "is", "are", "am"

Verbs are always at the end of a sentence.

- Watashi no-namae wa Jimu desu. = My name Jim is.

"ka" at the end of a sentence makes it a question.

- Anata no o-namae wa nan desu ka = Your name what is ?

- Use a rise in your voice at the end to sound like a question instead of a statement

-masu added to the end of a word or sentence is pronounced without the "u"

( -masu = mas, -shimasu = -shimas )

Tokyo is 2 syllables, not 3. ( "To-kyo" , not "To-kee-yo" ) (Capital City of Japan today)

***Add "no" to a noun or pronoun to make it possessive

***Add "-tachi" to a word to make it plural watashi = I watashi no = my (possessive) watashi-tachi = we (plural)

watashi-tachi no = our (possessive) anata = you (singular) anata no = your anata-tachi = you (plural)

anata-tachi no = your (possessive) konojo = she konojo no = her (possessive) kare = he

kare no = his (possessive) kore = this (like: this is good) kono = this/these specific object (like: this coffee is good) sore = that (like: that is good) sono = that specific thing (like: that coffee is good) hito = person (singular)

hito-tachi = people (plural)

****See your "Nihongo sensei" (Japanese teacher) for how to pronounce words. ****

****You will learn much by listening to and imitating native Japanese speakers. ****

****For now, learn the basics and practice often.

When you get to Japan, speak Japanese as much as possible, listen and copy words, pronunciation, usage, etc.

Saying "PLEASE"

. . . o-negai shimas (When asking politely for something. = "I humbly request...")

Kohi o-negai shimas = Coffee please

. . . o-kudasai / kudasai (When asking someone to do something, like: Open the window, please.)

= "Please give me the favor of..."

. . . o-negai shimas & . . . o-kudasai may be used interchangeably; they will know what you mean.

You may also hear someone use "dozo".

Dozo yoroshiku = Pleased to meet you.

When asking if you may have some more cake and the hostess says, "Hai, dozo" = Yes, please do.

When someone familiar knocks at the door and the host answers the door and says, "Hai, dozo." = Yes, please come in.

You ask a waitress for a menu and she says, "Hai, dozo" as she hands you one. = Yes, please have one.

just "dozo", meaning "please", "go ahead", "please do", "please come in", "help yourself", etc.

o-negai shimas & o-kudasai are polite requests, while dozo is a polite offer

Mainichi, nihongō o benkyo shimasu = Everyday, (I) am studying Japanese

[-ni = to, at]          Nihon ni = to Japan

Nihon = Japan 日本 (source of the sun)

Nihon-gō = Japan-language (Japanese) 日本語

Nihon-jin = Japan-people (Japanese)

- adding -jin to the name of a country means the people of that country. Like: Amerika-jin = American

FYI:

Officially “Nippon” (in full: Nippon Koku -- Nippon country)

Typically called “Nihon” - (source of the sun, “Land of the Rising Sun”)

Centuries ago it was “Ji-pon” (where we get “Japan”) from Marco Polo’s “Cipangu, Jipangu, or Jipan”

[ Romaji = Japanese transcribed to Roman letters, our alphabet ] konnichi wa

[ Kanji = traditional Japanese/Chinese symbols (there are thousands) ] 賞賛

[ Katakana = another symbol system, used for foreign names & words ] イエス キリ スト

[ Hiragana = another symbol system used for Japanese based words ] お父さん

nihyaku = 200 etc.

sen = 1,000

nisen = 2,000

sanzen = 3,000

AGE:

adding "-sai" to a number gives age

niju-go = 25

niju-go-sai desu = I'm 25 years old

(25 years am)

ju-kyu = 19 (10 plus 9)

ju-kyu-sai desu = I'm 19 years old

It is not uncommon to be asked your age.

Not to be nosey or rude, but to know what level of respect with which to address you.

Nan-sai desu ka = How old are you?

(what-age is) nan- = what-

TIME: jikan

Nan-ji desu ka = what time is it?

(what-hour is ?)

nan- = what-

CUSTOMS:

-san added to family name = Mr. , Mrs., Miss, Ms. , etc. (Matsuo-san = Mr. or Mrs. Matsuo)

Can be used with a given name, like Tiffany-san (Miss Tiffany) if you are on a first-name basis.

Never call yourself "MyName-san". It is a polite suffix of honor... for others.

Typically, one would introduce themselves with family name first, then their given name. For example:

"Watashi no-nameae wa Matsuo Hiroshi desu." = "My name is Hiroshi Matsuo." Address him as Matsuo-san.

When introducing yourself, the bow (ojigi) is preferred to a handshake

- from a nod of the head to a full bow from the waist. The deeper the bow, the higher the respect.

All dwellings, and some hotels, schools, restaurants, etc., have a "genkan" or entrance hall where you take off your outdoor shoes and put on "house slippers" (surippas).

\*Never wear your "street shoes" in someone's home.*

A Japanese bath tub is for soaking, not washing. Wash with soap and rinse thoroughly before entering tub. The same water is shared by all family members.

Cash (in Yen) is universal. Credit cards accepted at some merchants in larger cities. Buy yen at banks or use cards in ATM's. Take travelers checks and cash to exchange for yen upon arrival.

Katakana is a set of Japanese symbols representing vowels and syllables, used for writing foreign words and names.

In determining how to break up words to pronounce them one syllable at a time, these charts are a good reference. Each character (including vowels and "n") is a syllable.

Even "ai" is technically two syllables: (ah-ee) When said together quickly it sounds like "I" or "eye".

Hiragana is a set of symbols representing vowels and syllables, used for writing Japanese based words and names that do not have a Kanji (ancient Japanese/Chinese symbols).

When you see Japanese writing, you may notice the use of all three forms of characters, Kanji, Katakana and Hiragana.

How to construct your name by "Katakana" ?
